WINE BY THE BOTTLE | FRANCE

Over a storied 2600 year long history, wine is an established part of France's cultural fabric. Its wine industry has built itself into the world's best by developing a very specific set of controls for each individual region in the country.

Its winemaking is emphasized by the characteristic of 'Terroir', which essentially means 'place from where it came'. The two most famous regions are Bordeaux (Cabernet Sauvignon/Merlot) and Burgundy (Pinot Noir/Chardonnay). Generally, the whites are focused and full of minerality and the reds, expressive, earthy and dry.

WINE BY THE BOTTLE | ITALY

Italy has an intricate tapestry of winemaking, from ancient roots to the modern resurgence. When the Greeks arrived there in 8th century B.C. they called it Oenotria, or “the land of wine”. Considering the estimate of over 2000 different grape varieties growing within its borders, one could argue that it leads the world in biodiversity.

Its most famous regions are Chianti in Tuscany (Sangiovese) Barolo in Piedmont (Nebbiolo) and Prosecco in Veneto (Glera). Today it is a global powerhouse in wine production. Depending on vintage, it alternates between the largest and second largest producer. Considering these facts, it is impossible to describe Italian wine as a whole. As most regions are Mediterranean coastal we could generalize that the wines tend towards a softer, juicier side.

WINE BY THE BOTTLE | SPAIN

Spain has the world's largest vineyard area but ranks third in production due to low-yielding old vines. Since the late 1700s, Rioja has led the industry, especially with Tempranillo. Today, regions like Ribera del Duero, Castilla-La Mancha, Jumilla, Catalonia, and Rías Baixas also produce world-class wines. Despite regional diversity, one constant remains: exceptional value.

All have played integral roles in the development of today's wine industry and have history dating back hundreds of years. Germany for instance, produces some of the world's best white wines. Australia has the oldest consistent single vineyard on the planet. The Portuguese, who were great explorers, perfected fortifying wine for long journeys, thus creating the global trade market.
